

New Children's Book Features Lessons About Responsibility and Rules

Inspiring tale of a carefree mouse awaits readers

Freedom definitely is not free and there will always be boundaries to respect. What many do not realize is that rules must always be followed and there are always consequences behind every action taken in life. As such, it is not wise to be selfish or rebellious to others. In Cedric and Pete's Sailboat, the new children's book from author, Marianne Jones, readers are about to discover a moral tale of responsibility.

Cedric and Pete's Sailboat introduces to readers Cedric, a mischievous human-like, care free mouse that always gets himself into trouble. Fun-loving and caring, Cedric finds himself disobeying his mother and often goes to play at the park where there is a huge lake. One day at the lake, he finds a friend's boat and decides to take a sail only to encounter a huge storm. As waters get rough, Cedric realizes that he must act carefully in order to survive. Will he be able to make it out alive or is this the end for Cedric? Only time can tell.

Entertaining and inspirational, this book will teach children to take responsibility for their actions as well as associated consequences. Aided with the use of primary colors and nice artwork, the moral lesson behind the story is delivered in a light and humorous way that will keep the reader captivated and at the same time stimulate children's minds. Ultimately, the book highlights the importance of following rules and helping one another which makes it an ideal teaching reference for children. Surprisingly, this book has test at the end designed for reading comprehension awareness.
